wget --debug > download wpa supplicant windows 10 the captive portal profile is a simple xml file that is simply an unencrypted copy of the credentials used by the captive portal. there is no encryption in the profile, because there is no need for it. this section will show how to configure the captive portal profile for use with wpa_supplicant. this is a very simple configuration, and a copy of the captive portal profile can be found in the wpa_supplicant source code. the configuration is stored in the wpa_supplicant configuration file, /etc/wpa_supplicant/wpa_supplicant.conf. if the configuration is not found in this file, it is placed in the /etc/wpa_supplicant/ directory. we need to modify the captive portal profile file to include the hostname of the captive portal server, the unencrypted password, and the location of the certificate that is used by the captive portal server. we modify the configuration by adding a line to the wpa_supplicant configuration file, /etc/wpa_supplicant/wpa_supplicant.conf: after setting the success/failure and connection time to 30 days, i was able to connect to the same network multiple times with no issues. i'm not sure if this is an issue with the drivers or the actual wpa supplicant, but the problem is resolved. so if you are having trouble getting a wireless connection, try this out. this will not be covered in detail here. w1nterm1te has a nice detailed guide of wpa_supplicant. if you are just looking for a guide, i don't recommend checking out his blog, but if you are looking for something in depth, you should check it out.
