Pirate's Life is a 2D strategy game / city builder with an isometric camera where you take on the role of the captain of a crew of pirates that got shipwrecked on a deserted island. You will need to take care of your crews' individual needs (like hunger and drunkenness) in order to prevent a mutiny. At first you start with a basic set of buildings but during the game you will be able to unlock higher tier buildings and new resources which you need to satisfy the needs of the experienced pirates. The better a crew member gets, the more needs he will have. As you progress, you will also be able to build ships for your own fleet and send out raid parties to other settlements or trade routes in order to steal desperately needed resources or "recruit" new crew members which you can put to work. But every raid will increase your wanted level. Eventually the Royal Navy will start searching for your hideout to stop you from doing more mischief. Do you have what it takes to lead your settlement from a small fishing village to an infamous pirate haven? Pirate's Life Website: Enjoy! A: Disclaimer: Developing games in my spare time. Not affiliated with the developer. I really like this game's mechanics and would give it the edge over any other city builder in a single game. It is often claimed to be a city builder and a strategy game (and is often classified as both, like in the question itself), so I think it's legitimate to compare this with the other city builder games I've played, like Tiny Tower, Cities Skylines, and Pocket Planes. The most important feature that sets Pirate Life apart from other city builders is the isometric camera. For city builders with an isometric camera, building a city has an important side effect of also building the surrounding environment. Instead, city builders that use a top-down camera don't have this, and that is one of the features that separates Pirate Life from other city builders. The isometric camera also affects gameplay and the game balance in other ways. You can't pick things that are "offscreen", even though you can see them, so building a bus stop or a bridge by yourself or by a pirate (similar to building railroads in other city builders) requires that you can also build walls and barriers that prevent people from walking through or building on them. If you don't, people walking on

To remove a card you have to match it to a card on top of the pile with the same color. There are 108 cards in the deck. The more cards you have the better chance to win. The higher the quality of your cards the more points you get. You have to avoid the pitfalls and put your cards on the playing field in a clever way. Chapter IV - Hidden Mask Amidst the thunder of machine-gun fire, the wailing of panicked folk, barely a dozen GONM personnel dressed in riot gear and wielding spring-loaded plastic shields advanced on the Eastern sector of City CENTRAL. Plumes of smoke drifted across them as they slid along the grounds, searching for the mask-wielding ringleader. The leader fired, the muzzle flash dancing across the five cops behind him. One of the riot cop slid, convulsing in his after-death agony, as he fired and disappeared from sight. Hugging her arms around her breast, the clown-masked killer's eyes sparkled with mirth as he gave the other cops a bone-chilling laugh and casually strolled into the house. He was, perhaps, thirty feet away from them, when the transformation happened, the wailing was replaced by gunfire and the laughter was replaced by screams and groans of agony. A bomb was detonated at the back door and blew the clown-masked killer half-way back down the hall. He stumbled to his feet and held up a palm, his eyes filled with incomprehension. As they converged, his words came out in a frightened squeak, "Don't shoot me!" The cops hit him with grenade launchers and riot shotguns, one striking him a brutal blow to the face. He crumpled to the floor, a bundle of limbs, blood and broken glass. As he fell, a flash of metal appeared amid the dust of his dying. He grabbed hold of it and pulled it free, slowly rocking himself to his feet. Broken glass cut his naked flesh like it was a blade. In his hand he held a long, slender knife... A small, stubby machete, knife shaped. It was the same blade that had been buried in the Joker. The murderer practically threw it down to the second cop, who caught it unerringly. The ten other cops in the room gasped at the opportunity. The Joker stopped rocking and slowly turned to face the mortally wounded cops. He sneered at them, "I'm the Führer of this city!" he proclaimed. "And I have returned!" he laughed scornfully, "To finish what I began! To wipe out the last survivors of the GONM and achieve my divine destiny!" he said maniacally. "

Experience a history-influenced alternative world where the launch of the Berlin Wall triggers a violent cold war of global military conflict. You play as either the British, American, German or Soviet forces who must emerge as the victor. In the non-player campaign mode you are either an Allied or a Soviet war correspondent whose role is to observe the war unfold from the sidelines. The campaigns mode features eight scenarios that simulate the conventional war between the Allied and Soviet forces, each leading to a climactic finale. The campaigns mode's mode can be played using any of the original maps from the original Flashpoint Germany and the new version from the latest campaign release: 1. The Dukla Pass campaign, which simulates the end of the Cold War with a NATO invasion of the Czechoslovakian province of SFR Yugoslavia. 2. The Baltic campaign, which simulates the end of the Cold War by simulating the capture of East Germany by the Soviet Union. 3. The Iron Curtain campaign, which simulates the back-and-forth maneuvering for the control of Eastern Europe as a result of the United States deployment of nuclear missiles in Europe, which in turn leads to several European countries to deploy their own nuclear weapons. 4. The game scenario packs for the British and American forces, which simulate the various Allied and Soviet contingents who fought in the Red Army's offensive towards Budapest during the Hungarian revolution of 1956. 5. The game scenario packs for the Soviet force, which simulate the 'Red Army On The March' from the Soviet invasion of Czechoslovakia to Berlin in early March 1945. 6. The non-player campaign mode, which simulates the end of the Cold War as a result of the Soviet deployment of nukes in Europe. 7. The game scenario packs for the German forces, which simulate German military operations in Western Europe from the end of the Second World War in May 1945 to the early months of the Cold War in 1989. 8. The non-player campaign mode, which simulates the post-war occupation of western Germany by France and the US. 9. The game scenario packs for the American forces, which feature US Army, US Marine Corps, and US Air Force units operating in western Germany during the Cold War. 10.
