A collection of creepy original short stories compiled by Joshua Smith. The Book of Monsters is inspired from a pair of old postcards I found in my parents' attic. Their creator had scribbled cryptic words onto the back of the postcards in pencil. They have never known what the messages meant in life but they've always been fascinated by them and the stories they told. I have made a video of my take on the cards and their stories. However, I am not a professional writer and I am s... published: 25 May 2015 100 Dungeons and Dragons Monsters to Tame There are so many monsters out there, out of the myriad of them I am taking a look at the most typical and most commonly seen monsters in Dungeons and Dragons. What's new:

Ch. 11 Lauren Cole pulled herself up on her elbows, wiping her eyes as the sweat made her vision blur. She was wearing a top and blue jeans, but she hadn't bothered to put on the light gloves that went with them. "Heavy," she heard herself sigh. Helping hands were there, pulling her up out of her bed. They were working off the springiness that came with someone her age, yet still she looked far too tired for her to manage her limited movements. As they turned her, she could see there were three people in a bed opposite hers. It was too dark to make out more than shapes, but she knew Jason would have been on the other side of the third woman. In the middle of the group was a lone box, which obviously held her. The two helpers helped her walk into the box-pod, turning the illumination down and locking the lid. One of them stood by a control panel while the other two made their way to Jason's side of the pod. They both turned on a lamp not too far away from Jason's box and put the three of them in low light to sleep. When they had finished, they stood in silence for a few moments. "She's starting to show," they said in unison. "If she hadn't of had that surgery she would have been in here a month ago." They stood quietly for a moment more, then one of them said "You three go back to your room and get some rest yourselves. I'll cover for you." "Thanks man, that helps," Lauren replied. "Anything I can ever do in the future let me know, and you give me a call." She looked up from pulling the edge of her bottom lip between her teeth and caught the man's eye. He gave her a small smile. She smiled back. "I'll drive home, is that ok?" She was afraid to ask him if they could drive her, but she saw he was nodding, and it seemed they would let her go on her own. Lauren went back to their hotel room to find her clothes and put them on. The room was dimly lit, but there were clothes laid out on a chair in the corner. She pulled them on, careful not to get too sweaty on the straps of the tank top, and went back out, keeping her steps slow and casual. Of course no one seemed to be watching or following her, so she felt safe walking back to the
