Q: How do I balance a mutation-selection simulator? I am trying to simulate a Mutation-Selection algorithm to evolve food in a restaurant. Basically, the food (the computer game's AI) has a selection system that tries to evolve the best food at that moment, and a mutation system that could possibly improve the food's overall quality. The simulation is to start with a mass of food (for example, for a vegetarian restaurant, that may be anything from pizza to pasta to rice to chinese food to burgers) and evolve it through the years. Now, I would really like to be able to balance the quality and quantity of the food at each time, so that the more I evolve a restaurant, the more I reach my target quality, and I would like to be able to properly move in that direction. How would you go about doing this? How do you weight for example: "I would like to have 1 burger today and 2 pizza slices tomorrow"? A: Good luck with this problem, I think it's an interesting one. There's already a chapter in The Evolution of Artificial Life on automatic and intelligent evolution. A quick Google search got me this reference to a 1994 paper on a genetic algorithm that has a simulated physical world in which certain things happen that can impact evolution. It just looks like the author included 4 equations. Would it be possible to use that as a blueprint for a subset of your algorithm? The other suggestions in the comments to weight parameters are also helpful, but it seems to me that your situation is unique in that there's little to no room for a bunch of rules in your design. I think that you'll have to modify how you implement the algorithm. For instance, when I see the word "

Press the START key. Select Exploration. Choose the first location. When you start moving, notice that the square will display some text. The text is a hint for the items you'll find in the first place. There are only four items in the starting location. If you look around in the dark, you will see the 'Elf'. When he's in the center, it's easy to tell which direction he's facing. Now you can move. Click the items you like, go to the next place. The square next to the one you clicked will display the name of the item. Press the X key to go to the other square and click again. This time, you can find your 'Elf' in the middle, too. It's important for the next trick. Press the A key to move 'elf' to the middle, and press the X key to click again. Now you should see the two items you like at the other two squares. Go to the third place and look around for the 'Elf'. It will be in the middle again. You can only go to the third place when you have the two items in the other two squares. You can still click the 'Elf' when he's in the middle. The next time you click, it will go into a secret location, if you've got enough luck. You can only go to the secret location if you've got the 'Elf' in the middle. You have to work for it. When you're in the secret location, you can't move around. You just have to look around for items, and find 'Elf'. Take the item and go to the next step. This one is quite simple. There is just one location to click. There are a few items, but they are less important. Don't click them. Press the E key to move the 'Elf' to the center. Now you can click to find the next location. Click the item you like, and move to the next place. The 'Elf' will take over the middle again. e Style My very own personal version of Around The World in Eighty Days. At the moment I am living in my first country, the Netherlands. I woke up on my first morning in Sunnyside, Amsterdam with a face swollen and in immense pain all over. My back and shoulders hurt, and my head felt so heavy that I was even afraid to fall asleep. It took me nearly three hours to get up from my bed, and most of those hours were spent in a lot of pain. It was the day of my transfer from Jersey to Holland, and I think back to that day when my eyes suddenly opened up to a land I've longed for all my life. First of all, I do not speak a word of Dutch. After having lived eight years in a bilingual/bicultural country, I'm still hoping to adapt in this language, but I'm certainly not going to force it. Secondly, I'm an introvert and would rather sleep than talk all day, especially if it's to someone else. But as the days went, they became the longest of my life. I would spend several hours walking to work, then up until 11 in the morning, spend hours of making photocopies, and walking back to home. Everybody would try to make me go on a lesson once it was lunch time, but the amount of pain I was going through was making any form of me sitting on my bottom to study quite impossible. Last night I was sent home exhausted. You may be wondering, "How is a girl supposed to make money as a cleaner in Holland, when people pay more money for a meal at a restaurant than what I make in an entire day?" But you have to think of how much money you have to do the same as what I do in days. The fact is, you only have to make a call-back once and you can get another job. I did not have to have a job for many years in order for me to move to Holland, and I am still technically receiving income in America, but to an extent, it is making me want to move home more and more. Love This Island. Another effect on my struggle to adapt in a new country. I am coming from a place where the children play outside. It does not matter what the weather does, the children will play in it. It's a country where you have those vans instead of
