Why play Dude... the ice planet? Polarity: The environment is polarised — most of the time, the world is a frozen desert wasteland, only to go completely upside down when a critical mass of ice crystals strike the ground, and most of that goes into a huge transformational frenzy (or is that a 'fizz'?). Dude creates an ice-fizz barrier to freeze everything on'stable' polar regions. Dude is an ice fizz guy — he makes ice crystals out of coolant and also heats it up, which, when kept cool enough, creates incredible fizz. The fizz breaks up existing ice crystals and creates more with an almighty blizzard of fizz. The Ice planet is a stone cold place. Dude is cute. Yes, even if he's a dork. The mountains are polarised and heavily snowed up, causing subsidence to make the world a polarised place where the North Pole is essentially it's own little continent. Why spend the whole game fizzing around chasing Boy? We've completely reworked the gameplay around the 'Who's Boy' aspect. The standard Dude-Boy chase mechanic was ditched in favour of a simple idea of Man and Boy travelling through ice caves, which provides a greater sense of drama. You can choose to either go along with him, or run. In the latter case, you have a few options — hunt down the 'Stinkies' (hidden animals) for a bonus, use an ice-fizz to freeze the air, and then build a 'Fizz Brick', and then take off into the open air. You then use that new-found air to breathe, with the added bonus of up to 4 'Ice Fizz Boosts'. These take you up to 1000m over the ground. We've overhauled the environmental puzzles, the fizz mechanics, the ice fizz upgrades, and added a new fizz-boosting gimmick to make it all make more sense. Features: Loads of cool fizz combinations to unlock Lots of cute dialogue A chance to play as the Ice Fizz Guy Lots of work on the animations A story mode A game that you can play your own way Different environments, and the ever-changing fizz and polarisation that comes with it Is it a f c9d1549cdd

The tactical action game "Ghostrunner" takes place in a bleak future. The Earths surface has been devastated by a cataclysmic event and all that remains of human civilisation is an inter-dimensional gateway, known as Dharma Tower, formerly a failed interstellar drug research station. To guarantee the safety of Dharma Tower and the surrounding system, the human race has been reduced to a minimum population. The only survivors are police forces, government bureaucrats and hacker groups. The tower is under the control of the Keymaster: an all-powerful individual who sets the rules for both the outer world and Dharma Tower. Fight through the game on your way to ascend to the top of the tower in order to confront the Keymaster. A shadowy figure known as the Ghostrunner, who alone has the secret to the Keymaster's demise, will guide you through the halls of the tower. Features: Easy to learn, difficult to master. Build your character through the skill tree. Skill tree - Learn effective hacking and shooting techniques. Adrenaline gameplay - Action never stops. Procedural content and challenge. Action-packed, fast-paced combat. Key Features: • The game is entirely about action. Stop and think once - you'll be the first to die! • A wide variety of weapons, skills and equipment - should you die, it's not the end of the world! • A wide variety of equipment to unlock and upgrade. • Use the intuitive point-and-click interface to swap weapons, activate skills, and advance through the game. • Over a dozen weapons to unlock. • An extensive skill tree system, allowing you to unlock many new skills. • More than 50 levels across nine chapters! • The possibility to play every chapter for free! Recent Reviews: The following reviews are from the original version of the game and have been posted here for historical purposes. 8/10 - Gamezebo - "Your mission, if you choose to accept it, is to take down the corrupt Keymaster and lead the humanity into a new golden age." The following reviews are from the re-release. 5/10 - Kotaku - "It's difficult to look at Ghostrunner with the eyes of a cynic. Offering an intriguing in-universe backstory about the need to literally kill the Keymaster who has taken over Dharma Tower in order to stop a genocide, not to mention an action-

"The three fruits of the earth, rye, wheat and barley, were manufactured into flour, counted into pounds and sold to manufacturers in the cities of Iceland for a low and perpetual price, chiefly by the ministers and officers of state. The proceeds of the sale supported the public works, the charitable establishments, and the clergy." In the eleventh, and chiefly the twelfth century, the inhabitants of the isles prepared their food by baking and boiling, and boiled and baked their bread by the production of flour for that purpose, which they also sold in the villages. By degrees, however, the people became indifferent to bread, and reckons of oats and barley-meal gradually replaced flour and bread, and this substitute for the latter part of the twelfth and the beginning of the thirteenth century. Eating-houses At first, the eating-house was merely an ordinary kind of freehold, but by the end of the thirteenth century it had acquired properties which would place it in a certain class, a kind of owner of lands and houses, who was entitled to eat, drink and lodge at the cost of the public. He also made his money by baking, packing and selling in the market-places of various islands. The eating-houses there could brew strong beer, that would be good for drinking, while the water for the small ponds and lakes must be drawn out of wells, springs, rivers, creeks and rivers. The beer was drunk mixed with hot milk, but it was often mixed with frozen milk, simply to give it greater strength. In fishing-boats and in the humblest hut, the people enjoyed beer and meat with every meal. Even in the bed-room, according to the new custom when it was first introduced, the even then boorish old woman would always drink a goblet of beer with her evening meal. Households Until the fourteenth century, the peasants of Iceland lived under the same roof as their oxen. From the date when the hog-houses began to exist, they gradually took other habitations and removed from the home into the pigs' houses. On the introduction of Christianity, all the dwellings of the people were so arranged as to improve heat and ventilation. In the month of May, when the summer heat begins to make itself felt, three oaks on the hillsides were cut down and an enormous hole dug in a hollow among them, and under these
