Figure 2-1 shows the Photoshop logo. **Figure 2-1:** The Photoshop logo is instantly recognizable. In This Chapter Touring the Photoshop workspace Creating layers Creating masks Creating files Designing a logo or creation Photoshop truly has an unlimited palette of features that enable you to make amazing images that would be impossible to create in another application. You can combine the layers of Photoshop into the stacking order that you need to create an image, keeping all of its layers in their original state. With the use of layers and masks, you can alter all of these layers at once or restrict their editing activities. Photoshop has built-in help for almost every tool and function. In this chapter, we show you how to create new layers, create masks, design a logo, and clean up images. Although this chapter is divided into several separate Photoshop topics, Photoshop has one feature, the Layers Panel, that we discuss in detail in this chapter. We have grouped some functions related to layers under one section, for ease of navigation, but some topics are kept out in the open for easy viewing. We hope that you find our tour through the various layers and masks very educational. Getting Acquainted with the Photoshop Workspace The Photoshop workspace is divided into four major sections: the Layers Panel, the Sample Image, the Layers Palette, and the Bridge window. You can move through all of these sections in any combination, but the best place to start is always with the Layers Panel. (You can see a screenshot of the Layers Panel on the facing page.) Any image in Photoshop can have layers. Think of a layer as a container that can hold any kind of information or image. You can add text or pictures to a layer to create a new layer. You can place the various pieces of a complicated image in layers, one on top of another, until the image is completed. You can even combine three or four different layers into one layer, even though one layer can never touch the other layer(s) that are superimposed on it. You can have up to 99 layers in the workspace at one time. You have to use an additional layer called the Background layer to have a 100th layer. In the illustration on the facing page, you can see seven layers (the current number of layers available). The layer on the bottom is the Background layer, and the other layers are placed atop

(Reuters) - U.S. crude rose on Friday after President Donald Trump called Iran's President Hassan Rouhani in the latest development in a long-running feud between the world's top oil producing nations. FILE PHOTO: A pump jack operates at a well site leased by Devon Energy Production Co. near Guthrie, Oklahoma, U.S., February 4, 2015. REUTERS/Richard Shiro Here are the main themes to keep an eye on: U.S. TANKERS Trump agreed to extend waivers for certain countries to continue buying Iranian oil, according to a White House statement on Thursday, sparking a surge in U.S. crude futures. There was no mention of waivers to other countries, which may ease supply concerns as Iranian crude stocks climbed to more than 5.4 million barrels, according to unofficial data. Iran has rejected the agreement as "not constructive" and wants a complete lifting of sanctions. Last week U.S. sanctions meant that the operators of four oil tankers that were attacked in the Gulf of Oman did not get notified as they awaited clearance from U.S. authorities, according to a statement by the White House from Thursday's meeting of the Gulf Cooperation Council. That move, analysts say, will likely prompt other countries to restrict access to the strategic waterway, which routes two-fifths of the world's crude oil output. Iran's crude exports have been already being partially curtailed and additional restrictions may be pushed through by the United States to further disrupt the market. OPEC CLOUT OPEC can exert more market power if it leads producers into production cuts, which several analysts say could make it harder for U.S. shale producers to keep up production in the coming months. OPEC and partners Russia and non-member Nigeria agreed last year to cut supply by 1.8 million barrels per day from January 2017, according to OPEC. Nigeria was not invited to the production cut deal and it is unclear if its plans to cut production were taken into consideration. OPEC's share in global oil production declined by 2.7 percent between 2014 and 2017, according to its last monthly report. That slump, along with other factors, including shale and U.S. production, means OPEC now has to bear the lion's share of the global oil market. The group is also grappling

Romantic partners often prefer different colors, including the colors that are most evocative of the two people. However, there are a lot of people in the world that find it impossible to create a relationship together, or even find an attraction for each other. In such cases, it is possible to seek the help of a third party to perform a cross-color analysis. According to a study conducted by Cranfield University, the majority of people who belong to a relationship are aware of each other's colors. However, in the first stages of the relationship, the partners often spend a lot of time trying to establish the color preferences of the person they want to be with. Six colors most represented by the lovers According to the study, green and blue are the colors most represented by lovers on the most part. People who are in relationships usually prefer these colors because they are more evocative of nature. Also, these colors are often associated with the most positive and romantic symbols. Red is the second-most popular color associated with the romantic partners. The reason for this is that it is the most passionate color of the spectrum. Red is also the color of energy. Studies found a positive correlation between the types of color and the level of passion of the partners. In general, people who are from different colors prefer to mix them in the color spectrum. Blue and green also occupy a significant part of the scheme of colors in the relationship, however, the average people pay them a special attention. This is due to the fact that green is a color associated with nature, while blue is associated with emotions. Finally, yellow is recognized as one of the most amusing colors among the romantic partners. As yellow is associated with happiness, young people usually choose it as a wedding color. Also, yellow is associated with love. How to choose a third party for color analysis If you are in a relationship, and trying to find ways to strengthen the bond, you might want to analyze the colors of your partner in order to determine their preferences. In addition, you can also find ways to match a new color to your preferences. What's the color of your partner? There are a lot of online tools that allow you to have an instant color analysis. However, the best way to create a reliable representation of your partner's color is to do an analysis using a third party. There are many professionals who specialize in the field of color psychology and color consulting. They are
